Shakuntalam

Review

Write a review on shakuntalam based on the blissful co-existence with nature displayed in the play.

The first act of the play Kalidasa's Shakuntalam shows a deep connection between people and nature. King Dushyanta begins by chasing a deer, but he stops when he learns it belongs to the peaceful hermitage. He listens to the hermits and respects their words. This shows that even a powerful king can be kind and thoughtful toward animals and the forest.

Inside the hermitage, Shakuntala and her friends care for the trees like family. Shakuntala calls the plants her sisters and waters them with love. She notices the beauty of the Jasminevine and the mango tree and speaks to them as if they are alive. Her gentle actions show how humans can live in harmony with nature.

The play also shows that nature brings joy and peace. The girls laugh and talk while working in the garden. The king feels calm and pure when he enters the grove. The birds, trees, and animals all live without fear. This part of the play teaches us to respect nature and live with it in a friendly way. It reminds us that true beauty and happiness can be found in bonding with nature.

Character sketch of Shakuntala

Shakuntala is a young and graceful girl, delicate like a Jasmine blossom, with a gentle and charming presence. She is kind, loving, and respectful, especially toward nature and the trees in the hermitage, which she treats like her own sisters. She is hardworking and patient, as seen when she waters the plants with care, not for reward but out of love. Shakuntala is also thoughtful and observant, noticing the beauty of the trees and vines and speaking to them as if they are alive. Her actions show that she is humble and generous, always ready to care for others, even plants. She remains calm and joyful, though she is shy and easily frightened, like when the bee flies near her. Her close bond with her friends Anasuya and Priyamvada shows she is friendly and gentle in her relationships. Shakuntala's character reflects the theme of innocence, beauty, and harmony with nature.

Character sketch of King Dushyanta

King Dushyanta is a brave and noble ruler, seen first chasing a deer with skill and excitement. He is strong and handsome, carrying a bow and arrow, and riding in a chariot. He shows kindness and respect when he stops the hunt after learning the deer belongs to the hermitage. He listens to the hermits and bows before them, showing that he is humble and just. Dushyanta is observant and thoughtful, noticing the peaceful signs of the hermitage and choosing to remove his royal ornaments before entering. His curiosity leads him to meet Shakuntala, and he quietly admires her beauty and grace. He is polite and respectful, waiting in the shade and not disturbing the girls. His actions show that he is responsible and principled, guided by values more than pride. Though he begins as a hunter, he grows more gentle and spiritual as he enters the sacred grove.

Nature and Harmony Shine in Shakuntalam

Special Correspondent

Kalidasa's play Shakuntalam presents a vivid picture of peaceful coexistence between humans, animals, and plants. In Act I, the forest near Sage Kanva's hermitage becomes a symbol of balance and care. The characters live in close connection with nature, showing respect and affection for every living being.

The play opens with King Dushyanta chasing a deer, The hermits remind him that the animal belongs to the hermitage. The king immediately obeys, showing how human power must bow before the values of compassion and protection. The hermitage itself is described as a place where birds, trees, and animals live without fear.

Shakuntala and her friends treat the trees like family. They water them with love, not duty. This bond between humans and plants reflects a deep emotional connection.

The play reminds us that nature thrives when treated with kindness. Shakuntalam teaches us that peaceful coexistence is not only possible but also beautiful and necessary.
